

Data Snapshot: Kindergarten Court

“Kindergarten” literally translates as “child-garden” – and what a perfect description. In the elementary school years, with the right encouragement, children blossom as they learn to read and write, experiment with numbers, discover a larger world, and navigate social situations.

Kids aren’t mini adults. We don’t expect our little leaguers to play baseball with the same capability as adult players. We don’t expect a third grader to read or solve math problems as well as a high schooler. Why, then, should we expect a young child who has engaged in bad behavior – even very bad behavior – to have the same reasoning skills, same intent, and same ability to understand complex court processes and legal consequences as a teenager or adult? And the stakes are high; how we choose to respond to childish misbehavior can have lifelong impacts.

WHAT IS NEBRASKA’S CURRENT PROCESS?

Children under the age of 14 who engage in criminal behavior must be tried in the juvenile court rather than the adult criminal system.¹ This means they cannot go to prison. However, in Nebraska’s juvenile justice system, the child will still be served with legal paperwork and charging documents, face trial or have to enter a plea agreement, and undergo a sentencing process called “disposition.” The judge has a wide range of dispositional options, from probation and treatment at home to sending the child to a group home out of state. There is no minimum age at which a child can be held in a juvenile detention facility.

AGES AND STAGES:

Reading comprehension provides a good benchmark of a child’s aptitude. What are kids capable of understanding at each age?

WHAT DOES THE DATA SHOW?

In Nebraska, elementary age children are brought into contact with the juvenile justice system more frequently than one might expect.

ARRESTS

716 children age 12 and younger were arrested in 2014. In years for which detailed data was available to compare age at arrest with type of offense, the most commonly arrested offenses for this age group were for misdemeanor assault (i.e. fighting), theft (i.e. shoplifting), and vandalism (i.e. graffiti).²

PROBATION

A small number of very young children were placed on juvenile probation in 2015, primarily for delinquent rather than status offenses.^{3*}

*Delinquent offenses are criminal in nature, such as disorderly conduct. Status offenses are behaviors, such as truancy, that would not be chargeable, but for the child's age.
